CONVOCATION 2026 HONORARY DIPLOMA RECIPIENT

Robyne Hanley-Dafoe

What does this award mean to you personally?

Receiving this honour from St. Lawrence College is deeply personal to me because SLC believed in me before there was much evidence to suggest they should. I did not arrive with a polished academic story or a perfect transcript. In many ways, I arrived with potential, determination, and a hope that someone might give me a chance. St. Lawrence College did exactly that.

That trust changed the trajectory of my life. What began as one opportunity became the foundation for a lifelong journey of learning that eventually led me through four more degrees, a career in education, and work that now allows me to support people across Canada and beyond.

This award feels full circle. It is a reminder that one act of belief in another human being can ripple farther than we may ever imagine. To be recognized by the institution that first opened the door for me is both humbling and profoundly meaningful.

How have your interactions with St. Lawrence College influenced your path and the work that led to this award?

My experience at St. Lawrence College shaped far more than my education. It shaped how I understand people, leadership, and possibility.

SLC taught me that education is not simply about grades or credentials. At its best, education is about helping people see what is possible in themselves before they can fully see it on their own. I experienced faculty and staff who understood that education is not just about where a student starts, but about helping them get from where they are to where they are capable of going. That mattered to me deeply.

As someone whose work now focuses on stress, resiliency, hope, and human development, I often think back to how transformative it can be when people feel seen, supported, and trusted during uncertain seasons of life. SLC modeled that for me early on. It reinforced my belief that potential is not always obvious on paper and that compassion and accountability can coexist beautifully.

Much of the work I do today is rooted in helping people understand that they are more than their hardest season, their worst moment, or the story they currently believe about themselves. In many ways, St. Lawrence College helped me live that truth long before I had the language to teach it.

What wisdom would you share with SLC graduates based on your own experiences in your education and career?

I would tell graduates that life rarely unfolds in a straight line, and that is not failure, it is being human.

Some of the most meaningful opportunities in my life came from seasons that felt uncertain, disappointing, or incomplete at the time. Your path may change many times. You may outgrow dreams, redefine success, begin again, or take longer than expected to find your footing. None of that disqualifies you from building a meaningful life.

I would also remind graduates not to underestimate the power of consistency, kindness, and integrity. The world often celebrates big moments, but most meaningful lives are built quietly, through ordinary decisions repeated over time.

And perhaps most importantly, I hope they remember this: who you become matters just as much as what you achieve. Protect your character. Protect your relationships. Protect your well-being. Success means very little if it costs you yourself in the process.

There will be moments when you doubt your capacity, your direction, or your worth. In those moments, borrow belief from the people who see something in you until you are able to carry it again for yourself. Better days are always ahead. You can do hard things. You can do great things. Keep going long enough to meet them. And when you do, may you never forget to turn around, reach back, and help the person behind you believe they can make it too.
